Fraley In VHSL All-Star Football Game

Joe Fraley, former ACHS gridiron star, who will be playing his college football at Virginia Tech, was one of the quarterbacks participating in the Virginia High School League Coaches Clinic All-Star Football game in Richmond last Thursday night.

Randy Jenkins, Pennington High School QB, was the starting signal caller for the West squad.

An assistant coach for the West team inserted a third quarterback into the line-up who, according to ACHS Head Coach Stuart Justus, proved to be one too many. "It took away from the effectiveness of Fraley and Jenkins," said Justus, noting that the East squad used only two.

Nevertheless, Fraley, who made All-District, All-Region and All-State last season, moved the team well, completing 2 of 6 passes for 36 yards and carrying once for 27 yards. He had one pass intercepted.

The East team drew first blood when Southhampton's Cyrus Lawrence carried the pigskin in from the six yard line. The PAT was good and the East led 7-0 in the first period. The best the West could manage in the first half was a field goal booted by Hightower from Frankie County.

The West took the lead in the third period on a 4 yard run by Mike Ferguson from GW Danville and with a two point conversion went ahead 11 -7.

A little more than halfway through the fourth quarter Hightower attempted another field goal which failed and opened the door for a 39 yard bomb from Weegie Thompson to Alonzo Smith with 1:50 left in the game. The score gave the East a 14-11 victory.

Outdoors & Travel

by E. L. "Buck" Rogers

The outdoors is no longer a male sanctuary.

Today, when you see a long-haired person paddling a canoe down a float stream, or casting a plastic worm into some lake cover, don't jump to conclusions. This person is more likely to have bosoms up front than a mustache.

The gals have taken to the outdoors with a bang. They started edging out of their kitchens more than a decade ago. But in recent years their is been a mass exodus to the outdoors. Today, you'll find as many gals as guys in our nation's campgrounds. Of course, they're prevalent on our ski slopes. You see 'em jogging around the neighborhood, competing in running marathons, hiking along wilderness trails, exploring wildlife sanctuaries with a note pad and camera.

A few years ago I was invited on a whale watching expedition, on the southern coast of Argentina, by the National Oceanic Society. The group was largely made up of nature students from California. When I met them I found that 80 percent were females. How they got on that Braniff jet bound for Buenos Aires I'll never know. But they were there, and they survived bad weather and daily 10-mile hikes as well as the men.

When it comes to fishing and hunting, women are not quite as active as we males, but this doesn't mean that this situation won't change in the very near future. Joan Wulff, wife of writer-angler Lee Wulff, is one example. She can handle a flyrod better than most men I've met and has been teaching this subject for many years. She's a good example of things to come.

Bass'n Gals, an organization of lady anglers, may be an even better example of what's happening. This group, formed only a few years ago, is a viable and well-organized clutch of feminine fishing ladies. They hold their own tournaments, have a publication for communications, and are making more news than BASS did when it first got started.

Although I see the handwriting on the wall, I'm not sure I like it. A few days ago, a friend of mine came home after a hard day's work and found a note from his wife. It said, "Your dinner is in the refrigerator, honey. I've gone fishing."

I foresee even worse things happening, though. Sooner or later some youngster is going to walk by his father and say to his mother, "Mommy, would you take me fishing?"

Like I said, guys, things have changed.

KEEPING COOL

Hot Weather Tips

As the expression goes, cool it—especially in the summer—it's better for your health. Here are some hot tips on keeping cool: Drink an ample amount of water, about 8 glasses a day if you work or play in a high temperature. A cool summer diet: fruits, juices, vegetables, only a limited amount of fatty foods, or iced beverages.
